प्यारा प्यारा मेरा देश,
सबसे प्यारा मेरा देश।

दुनिया जिस पर गर्व करे,
रोसा सेनारा मेरा देश।

गांधी सेना मेरा देश,
सफल सलौना मेरा देश।

गंगा यमुना की माता का,
फूलोंवाला मेरा देश।

आगे जारा मेरा देश,

गुरु पूर्णिमा

गुरु के बिना ज्ञान नहीं,
ज्ञान के बिना कोई महान नहीं,
भटक जाता है जब इंसान,
तब गुरु ही देता है ज्ञान।

ईश्वर के बाद अगर कोई है,
तो वो गुरु है।
दुनिया से वाकिफ जो करता है,
वो गुरु है।

हमारी कमियों को जो बताता है,
वो गुरु है।
हमें इंसानियत जो सिखाना है
वो गुरु है।
हमारे अंदर एक विश्वास जगा दे
वो गुरु है।

The Divine Mother by Sadhana Kaikini

Prithvīdharāchārya (Prithvī-dhara-āchārya) was a great devotee of the Devī. Once, when he felt frustrated with no response to his prayers coming from Her, he decided to end his life. That is when She appeared and promised to forever reside in him as Vāk-Shakti - speech! Lo and behold! He found words of beauty in rhythm, flowing out from his lips in the form of poetry.

His fame spread far and wide and naturally attracted the attention of the king of the lands where he lived. He became a part of the king's group of courtiers. Whenever the king was fatigued, Prithvīdharāchārya would recite a poem that would rejuvenate him. No wonder that he became the king's favourite! Envious courtiers were soon on the watch to see how they could malign Prithvīdharāchārya. They got a chance when one day, the king was overwhelmed with Prithvīdharāchārya's outstanding poetry and rewarded him with a golden tray filled with jewels and expensive clothes.

Prithvīdharāchārya had no attraction for the riches of the world. He took the tray home and offered the tray and its contents into the sacrificial fire (yajña kuṇḍa) while worshipping the Devī. She was the rightful owner - not him, he believed! Spying eyes that were watching, were quick to report this to the king.

"Your Majesty! Your beloved Prithvīdharāchārya has no respect for you! He has burnt to ashes the precious gift that you gave him!" they said to the king.

The furious king summoned Prithvīdharāchārya and ordered him to bring back the golden tray with all that it had carried. The poet and foremost, a devotee par excellence, went home unperturbed. What had he to fear with the Mother's Constant Presence-within. With eyes closed, hands raised and a heart filled with love and surrender, he invoked Her and begged Her for Guidance in this challenging situation. Prithvīdharāchārya felt something heavy in his hands! He opened his eyes and smiled gratefully! The Mother had rushed to protect Her son.

In his hands was the same golden tray with all the expensive gifts intact!! The envy in the until then jealous courtiers was replaced by respect for Prithvīdharāchārya, when he returned to the king and returned the tray to him!

The compassionate Mother is ever-present within all of us as the Invisible Vāk-Shakti to help us purify our vāṇī and make our communication meaningful and effective.

Gems Of Ancient India - Vastu Shastra by Chandrima Kalbag

Vāstu Shāstra is the ancient Indian treatise of the technology of architecture and town planning. The position of the Vāstu Puruṣha forms the basis of this philosophy. But who is he? Where did he come from?

Pārvatī Devī, through intense devotion and penance, became the consort of Shiva, His very Energy or Shakti. Once, Pārvatī playfully crept up behind Shiva and covered His eyes with Her palms. It is an innocent gesture for human beings, but not for the Eternal Witness of the cosmos through Whose vision dharma is upheld. The gesture resulted in the birth of a demon, Andhakāśura. Since divinity had been momentarily eclipsed, he was born blind not only in sight, but blind to truth, righteousness and judgement or Dharma.

As Andhakāśura grew, so did his greed. He mastered weapons and prepared for war, even attempting to abduct Pārvatī. Finally, when the whole of Creation was in danger, Shiva had to vanquish Andhakāśura, Himself. In the fierce battle, Shiva was victorious, but for the first time, He broke into a sweat. As He expelled negative energy while upholding Dharma, another Asura was born out of it, who was not evil. Through tapashcharyā, he overcame his āśuric character and surrendered to Shiva. After intense penance, he received a boon to consume the three lokas, Swarga (Heaven), Bhūloka (Earth) and Naraka (the Underworld). Though his intention was not evil, his immense power became a threat to all existence.

In desperation, the Deva-s turned to Brahmā, the Creator, hoping for help. Brahmā turned to Vishṇu—the Māyāpati, to restore Cosmic Order. Vishṇu, advised Brahmā and other Celestial Beings to pin down the mighty asura, to contain and repurpose his energy. Each deity took their place upon his body, with Brahmā at the centre. Brahmā said: "You shall become the Vāstu Purusha, the spirit who governs and protects all spaces and dwellings." So, the asura became Vāstu Purusha.

Many households in India perform a special pūjā called Vāstu Shānti prior to occupying a new dwelling. Currently, they keep an image of the Vāstu Purusha, to guard the building. This image is usually placed under the floor with ritual Mantra-s in an appropriate spot by the officiating priest. In Vāstu Shāstra, the directions are indicated for beneficial results for rooms of the house e.g. Kitchen, Pūjā Room, Bedroom etc.

Many people study the ancient literature on Vāstu Shāstra and practice the vocation as Vāstu Advisers on all matters related to a beneficial layout of the building (Vāstu) being considered for construction and/or occupation. Such Sciences of our ancient past indicate how our elders endeavoured to connect human beings with the environment.
